☒ yes

There is no drastic difference between male and female smokers and non-smokers.

If your BMI is high, your health-related medical costs increase. Furthermore, if you are a smoker with a high BMI, these costs are even higher.

As age increases, medical costs are higher for smokers compared to non-smokers of the same age.

The number of children does not significantly impact medical health costs. However, if you are a smoker, your health-related medical costs will be higher.
